Elevator Speech

Most people’s first impression of Concordia University Nebraska is that it is rising out of a cornfield. That’s not entirely true – the town of Seward is on one side, the cornfield is on the other – but there’s something to the image. Concordia has a distinct small-town, close-knit community feel to it. Students, faculty and staff all get to know each other very well and develop a strong sense of community. That feeling of community is probably Concordia’s strongest asset; people are at Concordia because they feel they belong there, and they work together to educate students.

That community feeling is special because 1100 full-time undergraduate and 500 graduate students are involved in studying over 40 different majors. Concordia is traditionally known for its Education and Music programs, but it has a wide range of liberal arts programs, and is very strong in Art, Business and the Sciences.

And in the end, Concordia isn’t just a college in a cornfield. It’s only 25 miles from Lincoln, the capitol of Nebraska, and its graduates go on to careers throughout the world. Wherever they go, Concordia graduates are prepared to serve and lead, and they remain a part of the Concordia community.
